Alexandria Gazette.

MONDAY EVENING, JULY 9, 1906.

Rude Joke on Society Gamblers.

It has leaked out that at one of the houses, near Ascot, England, rented by an aristocratic woman, in which to entertain exclusive society during race week, the hostess set up a roulette table, which was an unfeeling source of interest after dinner until the small hours of the morning. Three of her men friends, who were staying at another house not far away, hearing of the nightly roulette parties, hired from a well-known consumer the uniforms of a police inspector and two constables. When play was at its height the house was suddenly raided by the "police." Two of the ladies players fainted. One of the men in trying to escape fell through a window onto a lawn outside, and another male guest rushed to the stables, where he was seen trying to saddle a horse to take him back to town. He was stopped just in time at the lodge gates, when the hoax was explained to him.

An Old Woman Dead.

"Aunt Annie" Buck, the oldest inhabitant of King George, and probably of the State, died last Saturday week at her home near Cleydale, at the remarkable age of 115 years. Her vitality was remarkable and until recently she was quite active. About twenty years ago she became totally blind, and continued so for about ten years, when her sight returned, and she was able to see well to the time of her death. There is no doubt as to her great age. Before the war she belonged to Mr. Daniel Coker of that county, and an exact record was kept of her age. She is survived by her daughter, who is about eighty years old, and by a number of grandchildren.

Raves and Dies.

Terror from being clawed by a cat at midnight caused the death of Mrs. Mary Ziegler, in St. Louis. The woman had been operated on for sarcoma, the most malignant of all forms of cancer, and was apparently recovering, when a large white cat wandered into her room in the hospital, climbed upon her bed and clawed viciously at the bed covers. Mrs.
Ziegler awoke with a shriek, and her cries brought up the nurses and doctors.
She could not be pacified, and continued to talk of cats until she died the following night.

Two specially equipped steamers, with a crew of divers, left Genoa Saturday for the Aegean Sea, following a contract between the government of Greece and the Genoa Society for the Recovery of Vessels, to hunt for Grecian statues, which sank with a vessel, wrecked near the island of Cerigo 100 years before the present era, while on the way to Rome. The place of the wreck was recently discovered by accident by a Greek diver, who brought up a statue valued later at 300 francs.
